Autodesk Apps & Autodesk Certification 2016

InfraWorks™ 2016 Update. This update includes enhancements to the 3D geospatial, a new work item type for infrastructure (and all of the traffic control improvements that the team always included within the traffic infrastructure work item type), and improvements to 3D modeling, including changing between 2D and 3D use in the design flow. There is also a great new feature in these updates, where you can begin moving design assets into their respective engineering work items (such as structural steel) and begin creating the conceptualization work items that will house the design asset dependencies. The new release of Autodesk InfraWorks 360 (great for engineering infrastructure, road and bridge designs in context) includes a very cool new feature, where you can begin moving design assets into their respective engineering work items (such as structural steel) and begin creating the conceptualization work items that will house the design asset dependencies. We call this Feature Setup and Unpack: all of the design assets that you are creating are set up as a package, and when you create your design asset and begin moving into your architecture, infrastructure, environment and other related projects (that we call after a design asset), you can push those design assets right into the work items. This makes it so much easier when you push an asset out of your design into engineering. Once that asset is on the engineering work item, you can click on the icon to open up the different properties that you have to that asset and work within that knowledge base to use the asset within your design. You can see how important this is, as you can now add any number of design assets (such as a water main) right into the work item and begin creating conceptual design work items that you can then push into the design of those types of design assets (such as water mains). A great tool with InfraWorks and Civil 3D is the ability to visualize data-rich 3D models with high-end visualizations, right within your design application. For example, within RoadDesign we have the ability to use 3D layers to display different types of infrastructure, terrain, as well as other data-rich visualizations for your designs, from detailed pavement to overhead roadways. For road design, this means that you can actually use your 3D models to drive around and drive different route selection techniques that you can use to visualize the different sets of road locations that you are using in your route selection.
