Cheranassery Cheranassery is a village located in Kannur district of Kerala state, India. It is situated on the bank of the river Chalakkudy, near Kannur Railway Station. Cheranassery is the largest and the only municipality in Kannur district. The village is surrounded by mountains of Western Ghats. The main population of the village is Muslim. Etymology Cheranassery is also known as Malangissery, but the Malangissery is a small town around Kannur. It is the cultural, political and administrative headquarters of the Malangissery Panchayat Union in Kannur district. There are many educational institutions located in Cheranassery such as five primary schools, one middle school, one girls' high school and one high school, one college and a professional college. History According to mythology Cheranassery is the kingdom of Cheran, the tallest mountain in Kerala. Cheran is believed to be the place where both saints Sankaran and Saint Chokkalingam are said to have lived. In 1727, Cheranassery was a village on the banks of the Kannur River. In the beginning, Cheranassery was only a small village and belonged to the Cheran clan of the Valiyapally of Peyyummelikkara. The Valiyapally was one of the five primeval dynasties in Kerala. The Cheran clan, among others, was a part of the Valiyapally. Cheranassery has seen many attacks from marauders like Thakan, Singaran, Nambinar, Pudussery, and Danavally. The Cheran Nair dynasty ruled the village for nearly four hundred years. During the period, the central village was known as Cheran. In 1906, this township was separated from Cheran and was named Cheranassery. Educational institutions Cheranassery has some important educational institutions. Arts and Science colleges Many arts and science colleges are located in Cheranassery such as Kannur Institute of Technology (KIT) (Co-education), Mar Ivanios College (Girls), Mar Ivanios College (

Which race and gender do we prefer to observe? Evidence from soccer. In this study, we examined the observation preference of participants in an online soccer game. In the game, the participants were shown either player or assistant referees. After playing the game, the participants were asked to rate their preference for either race or gender, and what factors influenced their decision. The participants showed a strong preference for observing the player race, and a weaker preference for observing the assistant referee race. Their preference for observing the assistant referee race was mainly due to the assistance provided by assistant referees. However, participants showed a stronger preference for observing the male assistant referee race. Moreover, females tended to show a stronger preference for observing the player race than males did. These results suggest that race and gender have different effects on observer's observation preference and provide a possible explanation for the gender difference of the penalty-decision paradigm.//
