Q: Can I keep a file open between requests? I have written a thread in ruby that takes data from a text file and does calculations with it. I want to build a form that can generate the file for processing. I am not sure if I can keep the contents of the file open while the form is open, or would I have to regenerate the file from scratch? A: A thread doesn't get any methods to do that. Ruby threads tend to allocate very little of the memory and so they are very 'thin' when it comes to memory. A thread will generally allocate a set of the memory and then there will be open file descriptors, a stack and usually other miscellaneous allocated memory. The threads won't be sharing memory, they will be completely different threads with different processes/

Q: SparkStream API I'm trying to integrate SparkStream with SparkSQL. But I don't know how to use the API. According to the doc, there is a code to read a stream from a file: `JavaRDD> rdd = sc.textFile("s3a://bucket/file.txt");` What i don't understand is how to use a streaming data. My example is below: `Dataset ds = sparkSession.readStream().schema(schema).format("csv").option("header", "true").option("delimiter", ",").csv(path); //... //what to do here? ds.writeStream().outputMode(OutputMode.Append()) .format("orc") .start(); //... I really need some help.` A: It's pretty simple. In your case, the steps are: Reading from CSV Writing to HDFS This answer is based on the example from the Spark Stream docs which is available here `Read from CSV ... // read from CSV val textFile = sparkSession.read.csv(path) // execute query val df = sqlContext.sql("SELECT * FROM table where id='C-1'") // add results to a dataset df.createOrReplaceTempView("table") // write to HDFS df.toDF().write.format("orc").save(path) // write to Kafka df.writeStream.outputMode("append").format("kafka").start() // write from Kafka to HDFS df.writeStream.foreachBatch(...)` Q: How to move results from a for-loop to a
