Despite a dramatic increase in home births, there's no evidence to suggest they're safer than hospital births, warns a new report from the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention. The report, released Wednesday, tracked more than 250,000 babies born in 2005, the last year for which CDC data are available. Home births accounted for 9.3 percent of U.S. births, up from 3.4 percent in 1980. If the increase in home births continues at the current rate, 30 percent of U.S. births will occur in the home by 2010, the report says. Seller Homebirth and a friend's home birth were among the reasons the CDC report listed as reasons for the increase in home births. "Many women choose home births for good reasons -- because of a home-based job or a lack of access to a hospital or because of cultural or religious beliefs," Dr. John Edmondson, the report's lead author, said in a statement. "By increasing access to home birth, it may increase the overall number of home births. However, in our analysis, no subgroup has an increased risk of adverse pregnancy outcomes in a home birth compared to hospital birth." The study found almost 4.6 percent of U.S. babies who were born in hospitals had a low birth weight, which is one of several risks associated with pre-term birth. The report also found increased rates of premature births and pre-term premature births among black babies born in hospitals. There was no increased risk of death among babies of all racial groups in a home birth.
