Image editing refers to the process of manipulating the contents of an image. This includes changing pixels (either to alter details of an image, or to remove unwanted objects and details), colorizing images (bringing out details in dark or faded colors that may otherwise be hidden), removing unwanted objects or features (such as dog ears from a human head, or blowing up an airplane or the sky into a dramatic scene), and adding elements to enhance a photo or to make a photo look better (such as tinting a baby's eyes green). ## Discovering the Types of Photos and Images You never fully know what a photograph is until you see it, so you need to understand the different elements in the various types of images, including the following: Histogram The _histogram_ provides you with the amount of light and dark elements in your image to help you adjust the light and dark areas of the photo. Photo effects Several effects and filters enable you to transform an image. The most common effects include converting an image from black-and-white to color, changing the image's color, and adding effects such as sepia and negative image effects (retouching). Photo frames Several different frame options enable you to show your audience some of your image. Frames such as a mat, a photo frame, or even a frame you create yourself can make a photo more attention-getting. ## Finding out what makes a great photo When you're looking for what makes a great photo, consider the following: Light As the saying goes, _a picture is worth a thousand words._ Someone didn't say it but actually said it. That's what a great image should show you, without words. A good image should convey what the photo is all about, but a great image should also support any words you give it. Breathing room Professional photographers and illustrators look for images that tell a good story, but they also look for images that have an appropriate amount of _space_, or _room_, around the image (such as the background area) and the _pixels_ (or dots) of the image. The higher the resolution, the smaller these elements are (the pixels), and the more room they have. Space and pixels are two important concepts to consider when you're creating a great image. Significant objects A photo that shows the eye of a real person tells the

The Dodge Tool works as a type of paint-like tool that can add light to dark areas of a photo. It brings out a range of tones from an image, and can also apply a graduated filters to remove tonal distractions. The Burn Tool is used for special effects such as photo retouching. It's also used for cloning and for making smoke and dust effects. The Healing Brush uses the Radius option and can be used to remove blemishes and other local defects from an image. It can also be used to remove dust or specks from the image. The Spot Healing Brush is a special brush that works similar to the Healing Brush, but it can only be used with specific types of objects. The Spot Healing Brush will not work if it does not recognize the types of objects. When painting with the Spot Healing Brush, a tolerance range appears around each pixel area selected. The tolerance can be increased or decreased depending on how small or large the area is that is to be corrected. Modes and Filters The Modes and Filters are responsible for getting the most out of Photoshop. The following are some of the most commonly used, and a list of the most commonly used filters: Blending Modes There are several different Blending Modes that can be used with a photo. The Blending Modes are simple tools for adding and removing pixels and contrast to images. Use of these Blending Modes creates many effects in photos, and they are typically used to bring out subtle qualities of images: Normal – This mode adds contrast and lighter and darker shades to an image. The affected pixels are normal white. Multiply – This mode is generally used for removing elements from an image, and can be used to leave dark colors on white areas of an image, or for turning dark colors into black. Screen – This mode is best used when there is something in an image that needs to be removed. All pixels and tones in the image are black. Lighter – This mode adds contrast and lighter tones to an image. For instance, a photo that has a dull background can be turned into a more creative, lively photo by using the Lighter Blending Mode. Darker – This Blending Mode adds darker tones to an image. The pixels are black, and the contrast is just barely higher than that of the Normal Blending Mode. Sepia – This mode adds contrast and shades of red, orange, yellow, and brown to the pixels of an

Q: Importing a local project into a remote docker container I'm not able to import a project into my Docker container. I have created a new project from a docker container with: sudo docker run -d -P \ --name=full \ -v ~/source:/root/proj \ -v ~/workspace:/workspace \ --name=workspace1 \ pyenv/base \ /bin/bash This is working fine. Now I want to import a project into the container. So I created a folder on the remote docker container and created a project there. I tried to import the project to the docker container with: docker exec full sudo docker cp -v ~/source:/root/proj ~/workspace:/home/user/workspace/proj_name The result is [sudo] password for user: Unable to find image 'full:latest' locally latest: Pulling from library d21da13a1e02: Pull complete Unable to find image 'full:latest' locally latest: Pulling from library ea088e95a27b: Pull complete d21da13a1e02: Pull complete latest: Pulling from library 925f4a9737c8: Pull complete 47a36ab5f974: Pull complete 9eca8bc61b95: Pull complete 9ed94099e00: Pull complete 4c8d7590e17e: Pull complete dc9a3b4a6d46: Pull complete 78f92cf16226: Pull complete 07b43c1785b9: Pull complete 771212cf7c66: Pull complete 38af5b039ad2: Pull complete 037d22
