I am already aware of a Transform TFT (TFT) that maps the data input of the TFT to the data output of the TFT. My research has lead me to the term end-to-end transform (E2E TFT) and I am wondering what exactly that is. I am aware that this fits in the TFT category but I do not know what it is exactly used for. A: The definition of an end-to-end transformation seems to be: An end-to-end transformation (E2E) is a transformation of topological data (T) which is defined over the edges of a graph, such that it is possible to get an existing transformation T' over graph G' which is essentially as optimal as T while possibly using less resources. In other words, for E2E transormation, the edge data is transformed to the same edge data but possibly in a different order. For instance, an E2E transformation may swap 2 adjacent edges so that their initial order doesn't match. Or it may interleave horizontal and vertical edges in one pass. Or you may perform multiple E2E transformations before using the original TEG cell as a non-multiplexed memory. On the software side of things, you'll need to find ways to generate the data order that optimizes the number of TEG cells used for the transformation of data (this should lead to the best overall memory solution). The data that is being E2E transformed may be coming from many different sources which can be seen as graph nodes to which edge data is input. For instance, for the aforementioned E2E

The tables on this adventure were both designed and produced by James M. Spahn and the rest of his fellow triad in the company of Monster Escape, based out of Silver Spring, MD. The document you are holding in your hand was converted into a.PDF and then scanned. It was then post-edited in text editing programs to adjust for inconsistencies that might have occurred during the conversion process, and to remove errors that were already present in the documentation. All scanning, conversion, editing, and posting was done by the company's owner, James M. Spahn. The map is a.PNG that has been resized to fit the tables to the best of the company's ability. Fantasy Grounds is a fully supported, premiere 3D map/setting creation program (which should mean something to you, if you are a gamer). Support does not include anything beyond the conversion process, and any post-release issues that may arise. The players that accompanied us on the adventure were: Mike Potter, Corey Lyle, Stoneman "Riot Grumble" Woodruff, Michael Potter, Brian Pollard, and Adam Gilczewski. The converted material comes with a comprehensive Quick-Reference card, a map of the adventure area, several Tilesets to set the ambience of any campaign setting, several encounters for the heroes, several enemies and one surprise or two for the villains, and a few gazetteers of the main area and the realm of the storm giant Clovis Tempestas II himself. Each of the encounters and gazetteers should come in handy as players carry on their adventure, and the map can be used to plot and plan future adventures. The Company of Monster Escape will be creating adventures every month and release them as PDFs. Each month will introduce new monsters, new story concepts, and new ways to approach an adventure. You will not need to subscribe to each month's release in order to play one of them. A subscription only gets you access to ALL of them for the duration of your subscription. For more information please visit The GMs on this adventure were: Mike Potter, Corey Lyle, and Riot Grumble. Each of the editors was responsible for one set of tables. The World Builder on this adventure was Riot Grumble, who was also the Art Director and Cover Artist of this adventure and the other two adventures released so far. You get All Three 1. In Vino

Ship there is... Community Ship there is... is a project by Norwegian group Infraboss which started as a collaboration between Maximalix and Narnia42. The project has now been folded into Independent which is the legitimate owner of the Ship there is... name and brand (As of 27/08/2018) More to know about Norwegian psychogeography and spatial encounters Last week I had the pleasure of joining The Norwegian Workshop in Psychogeography (NWP) and Explore Psychogeography (EPY) in Copenhagen, 2018. Norwegian Workshop in Psychogeography (NWP), 2018. Photo by Daniel Black Dann. Psihogeography is a fascinating interdisciplinary field of study, which encompasses philosophies, theories, and concepts. The word psych(o) and geo(graphics) (as well as psychology and geography, respectively) are combined in order to describe this field of study in a particular context. The aim of a psychogeography is to "look at places as subject, place, and person and to understand the impact they have on the psycho-social and emotional of individuals." If you want to know more about the history of psychogeography, Wikipedia has a nice article about it! From start to end, the NWP was a vibrant creative workshop with presentations, workshops, field trips, lectures, cinema screenings, pub crawls... Planning the event for 3 years in advance, it was a real eye-opener for me. Lioritz Boas from Narnia42 has been involved as a member
