Japan seeks Sepp Blatter's resignation' UBS analyst Michael Haddad raised his price target to US$37.50 on FIFA's shares, while Jefferies analyst Marco Pochiarro raised his to US$33.50 as a result of increased formal consultation with FIFA. "The FIFA reforms that have led to the appointment of a new president bring to our attention that it is time for the U.S. to take back its seat on the FIFA Executive Committee as they have, quite frankly, outsourced their interests to the FIFA's development and operations teams in accordance with the FIFA reforms," he wrote. The "top-level" reform of the organization, which Blatter created following the 2010 FIFA World Cup, is "well-planned for success with the support of the USFIFA, the IOC and the sponsors", Blatter said. FIFA has also worked hard on the "third pillar", to boost women's football and the introduction of innovative formats for the World Cup. "We expect that the reforms will strengthen the team as a grassroots organization to support the national associations' activities. This in turn will lead to better support for FIFA's primary pillar, which is the international men's and women's competitions. In addition, the reforms will strengthen the competitive pillar, which will help the FIFA World Cup qualify the best qualified teams for the FIFA World Cup, the Olympic Games and the FIFA Club World Cup," he said. FIFA President Sepp Blatter and FIFA World Cup host nation Uruguay's football coach Oscar Tabarez attend a news conference after FIFA's Executive Committee meeting in Zurich. Blatter also promised that the federations in their rights would be protected from any decision made by the new FIFA Executive Committee that could hurt them. "I am convinced that the national associations will protect the interests of their own members," Blatter said. The leader of the Swiss federation, Urs Schwaller, said he supported Blatter. Blatter, whose second term in office expires in four years, has been widely criticized for the bid blunders and corruption scandals that marred the running of the 2010 FIFA World Cup and helped erode public trust. He was re-elected to his position last month. FIFA is expected to be back in the spotlight after the vote in August of the presidential election
