CanariasfotorealistaparaFSXhackonline.sueconttoves's Ownd. The present invention relates to systems and methods for monitoring and controlling the airflow in, through, or from a building or building portion, including and having in particular a chimney. Many systems and methods for monitoring and controlling the air flow in, through or from a building or building portion are known. Such systems are found, for example, in heating, ventilation and air conditioning (HVAC) systems. Typically, such systems include a room sensor connected to a thermostat, which is used to control the HVAC system. Such systems often include a central site sensor connected to a thermostat, which is used to control the HVAC system.

Such systems are highly satisfactory where there is direct communication between the building and the system, for example, in situations where the building is directly connected by, for example, a duct to the central site. However, where the building is not directly connected to the central site, it is desirable that there be a way to monitor and control the flow of air through the building (e.g., through a building wall), such as between the building and the central site or between buildings. Such monitoring and control can be achieved using acoustic monitoring and control systems, for example, as described in U.S. Pat. Nos.
