The new standard for collaborative design software First collaboration for 2016 (32/64-bit edition) (.95MB):Lee Harvey Of The Peanuts It's difficult to create a universally appreciated piece of art. When artists paint or draw, there is always a unique vision to go along with it, and when they write or paint, there is usually a specific content that they are trying to convey. I'm at a loss to say I like all I've written in this blog, but I'll gladly still tell you about it if you like the subject matter. A rare comic book about a dog. So it turns out. Just a few days ago, the Jerry Craft over at Rare Pop Culture Merch had a post about Peanuts comics with real dogs in them, or at least a dog that looks like Snoopy. Interesting enough, you can find a copy of the comic if you want. For some reason, the book is rather rare. But I'm looking at it right now. The cover features Linus reading the comic and then thinking about how Snoopy would be getting along with a dog, or perhaps vice-versa. We don't know. The comic is very clearly a tale about two best friends, both human and canine, who are separated due to a tragedy and reunited. The comic itself is a great tale about friendship. Snoopy and his fellow canine friends from the Peanuts cast end up going to a dog shelter and walking through the list of dogs there and eventually come across the real Snoopy who belonged to a person from the town. So great. It's a classic tale about the difficulties of dog-human friendship and all the different dog-human relationships that can exist within it. The Peanuts gang can't find good friends in the real world, but they learn that they can have close relationships with their other human friends by pretending to be the humans' beloved dog. It's a wonderful tale, just the sort of thing that Charlie Brown would create. The Linus strips are also interesting. Linus is overcome with guilt over his and his family's general lack of support of a dog, and he thinks he's found a solution. As we learn in this strip, Linus has secretly tried to help Snoopy and his new dog owner by painting a portrait of Snoopy for his girlfriend and by hiding the dog food.
