Maybe you didn't notice that your hard disk crashed, or someone stole your computer, or maybe you accidentally erased the files. It's never easy when you have accidentally deleted some of your data and you know that time has long passed and there is nothing you can do about it. But, don't worry - there are steps you can take to recover deleted files and folders. Some of the methods we will discuss are with commercial products, while others are free and easy to use. Let's get started. Steps to Recover Lost Data 1. Prevent data loss Before you start, you should set up a backup policy. If you don't, you could lose everything! Here are the basic steps: Backup the important data before you launch any operation in the computer. Create regular backups of the important data: - Regularly, set up the backup of all data that you have on your computer. - Be consistent with the frequency of backups - Every day or every two days, you should make a backup of your documents, pictures, videos, music, and other important files and folders. 2. Hard disk drive If you suspect that your hard disk is no longer working, you should buy a new one as soon as possible. Check to see if there are any physical problems, because they can cause the computer to have problems when it is turned on.
