App Store: 4.5/5 Google Play: 4/5 Typically, when a wireless telecommunications device, such as a cellular telephone or a personal digital assistant ("PDA"), subscribes for wireless telecommunications service, the device is assigned a phone number or access code that is used to identify and to contact the device. After the device subscribes for wireless telecommunications service, the device sends a "registration request" to the wireless telecommunications service provider that indicates to the service provider the assigned phone number or access code of the device. The wireless telecommunications service provider then provides the phone number or access code to the customer of the device. Further, some devices, such as emergency service dispatch systems, provide service to multiple locations. For instance, an emergency service dispatch system may be used by a city's police department, fire department, and ambulance service. Each of these services often maintains its own separate customer relationship management ("CRM") database that stores information such as the customer's name, address, telephone number, and other pertinent information. Using the device's CRM database, a dispatcher of the emergency service dispatch system may access and retrieve information from the device's CRM database to assist in the emergency. Further, when an emergency call is made, the emergency service dispatch system may route the emergency call to a location closest to the caller. Because there may be multiple versions of the same device operating within a jurisdiction, each with its own phone number or access code, it is often difficult for a dispatcher to ensure the devices for which the emergency service dispatch system provides service are properly handled. If a dispatcher receives a call for an unknown device and a device having the same phone number or access code is a few blocks away, the dispatcher may need to waste valuable time locating the correct device before handling the call. Thus, there is a need in the wireless telecommunications arts for a method and apparatus for identifying a wireless telecommunications device.Kneih's Pipeline Capable Addons Repository I tend to keep things simple. One file, built with CloudFormation and all that. At least, I did. Until Kneih. I have no idea what Kneih is, and I certainly have no experience with them.
