The national scope of this study, including the enrolment of children living in rural areas, can be used as a basis to assess and compare the gap between the world's income, health, education and nutrition for developing countries and for the world as a whole, and can thus help to establish indicators for the monitoring of progress in these areas. The study has been carried out at a global level, including data from all over the world, although taking advantage of the harmonisation of statistical systems in order to provide more advanced evidence and policies for all the Member States. Adopting a cross-country approach allows for a clearer identification of the key problems of the different regions of the world and, through the use of a systematic research methodology, for the presentation of a more detailed picture of each region considered. The data, representing reference indicators of progress in the different areas, are consistent with those published by the United Nations, although the statistical system of the ILO complements them. The study uses every opportunity to adopt a methodological approach appropriate to such a broad and complex subject, making the best use of the available information in order to provide a useful and coherent analysis of the state of the world and the main challenges that face it. The information generated by this study is of great relevance to policy makers and the general public, allowing for more in-depth and broad-based reflection on and discussion of the findings. This tool can be used and adapted for the exclusive use of the Instituto de Estudios Económicos de la Paz (IEEP), which is recognized in Spain as a non-profit-making organization. Possible improvements and reflections of the methodology used and other variables to be considered will be published. SUPPORTING DOCUMENTS Supporting documents The book is structured as follows. 1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a vibration-damping device, and more particularly to a vibration-damping device for a package of an electronic appliance such as a camera. 2. Description of the Prior Art Conventionally, a vibration-damping device in the form of a triangular bellows is fitted on the outer periphery of a camera body to absorb vibrations produced in the camera. Such a bellows-type vibration-damping device is disclosed, for example, in Japanese Utility Model Preliminary Publication No. 61-23302. The conventional bellows-type vibration-damping device, however, requires large space for its protection. Further, it is quite costly, because it requires a complicated construction. Future Gamer: Angry Birds I've been on a rash of gaming purchases lately, namely because I'm reading a lot of interesting and relevant games and thought I should have them all on my gaming PC. This is what I got: 2. Angry Birds' Publisher: Rovio -Price: ~$4.99 -Platform: All -Resolution: Any -Gamer Rating: 8 out of 10 This is a very good game. There's really nothing like it in the market. The game mechanic is very clever and the graphics are wonderful, despite being funny. I'm already about halfway through it and I really can't put it down. The game is just that good. I do have a gripe about the game though, which is the location of the bird. We use a lot of outdoor games and the penguin takes up a lot of our outdoor space. Thankfully he doesn't have a laser cannon, but he does have a very loud and abrasive attack. It gets tiresome having to put the bird back far away from where it can pop up on our screen. I've had this game for about a month and already have many hours of gameplay, but I feel that it's going to go on for a little longer. It's fun while it's happening, but it's also a lot of work to get down a giant green bird. I'm sure that this game will be the new standard for the Angry Birds series for a very long time. I've also been playing a bit of Dynasty Warriors: Gundam with the TV in
