Q: Why are there 2 different dates/years on this gravestone? My family and I lived in the Old North Church in Charleston, SC for over 30 years and I helped the church in many ways during that time. The church cemetery has a stone with three different dates: 1/12/1795 4/22/1852 1/13/1896 The dates 4/22/1852 and 1/13/1896 are the ones my family lived in. The 1795 date is for a different family. I don't know why there are three dates on the tombstone. A: The dates 4/22/1852 and 1/13/1896 are likely the dates that the headstones were placed in the ground, and the stone on top of them is the date that the stone was placed on top of the headstone that is in the ground. They don't take into account the fact that the headstone was moved and was replacing an earlier one. It is like a credit card that has both a present and a purchase history. The present is the new headstone and the purchase history is the date when the headstone was placed on the ground. In the US and other countries you will find ways to combine the headstones over time. Sometimes a family keeps the original until his or her death, and then has the replacement placed on top. In other places, the headstone is moved to another area of the cemetery and the replacement is on a different date. When there is no way to combine the two, two headstones are placed in the ground, and a new headstone is placed on the ground at the same time that the existing ones are moved. The other part of what caused the confusion is that the stone on top had dates that were before the headstone and the date that was placed on the stone. That usually means the stone on top was the replacement. A: It appears the dates on top of the headstone is the replacement dates, not the actual dates of burial. The graves of the family are buried in a different location, and the headstone was placed here later. According to this link, the dates on the burial site are: Inscriptions on the older tombstones of various form. Inscriptions on newer tombstones of various form. Four simple mortuary tablets with dates of 1795,

A United Nations report on global warming warns the world could be headed for more extreme weather, particularly in the tropics. While there is no single physical mechanism responsible for global warming, the UN panel finds there is a clear indication that the world is indeed changing. Although greenhouse gases emit heat, when they get into the upper levels of the atmosphere they are trapped. That results in more heat being retained in the atmosphere. The world has experienced a number of natural warm episodes, in the past, but none as extreme as the current one, says the UN. "Holidays in the tropics are hotter than usual. You have a hotter than usual spring in the Northern Hemisphere," says Professor John Christy, Director of the Earth System Science Center at the University of Alabama in Huntsville. "For example, the southern United States is way out in front of the rest of the country." "Overall, since the turn of the century, we're seeing a third to half a degree increase in global mean surface temperature," says Christy. There are several reasons why the world is getting warmer. One is the rising levels of carbon dioxide in the atmosphere. Carbon dioxide is a greenhouse gas that traps the sun's heat and prevents it from escaping. When carbon dioxide levels rise, plant growth is suppressed. This results in warmer surface temperatures, with additional warming on top of that. Another reason why the earth is getting warmer is simply due to the fact that there is more energy in the sun than ever before. That's why there's more sunlight. As the greenhouse gases warm the air, the ocean waters absorb heat and are also on the rise. To make up for this, the land is warming, and the oceans are expanding. As these areas warm, they become wetter. The earth's pre-industrial climate is not as warm as the one we experience today. Several studies have even shown that before the industrial revolution, the world was actually cooler than it is now. No single weather event can be pinned on global warming, says Christy, because the earth's climate is a complex system. "There's a lot of variability, so you cannot say that climate change caused this or that," says Christy. "We know that there are natural changes in the climate. We have known about them for about 400 years. If you go back to the 1600s, the atmosphere was not as warm as it is today. It was cooler." "
