I have users set up in /etc/password, which contains {hash}, {password}, and {user}. I have these set so that a script can generate the hash when a user is added to the directory. I have also tried to add these users to the directory, but that did not work. The user appears on the directory after the domain login with no hash. I have tried two users with the same results: ldapadd -D uid=x;password=xxx -w /etc/passwd {hash} -f /etc/passwd {password} -f /etc/shadow {user} These users also will not show up on the directory. They are set up on the directory with the same result. Also, I am using OpenLDAP, but I don't think this should matter. I found one example, and no errors, just a user that was not created when I ran the code. Here is the example code {taken from ldapadd -Y EXTERNAL -H ldapi:/// -D uid=x -w /etc/passwd {hash} -f /etc/passwd {password} -f /etc/shadow {user} A: The examples you're finding are old. OpenLDAP no longer stores the encrypted password (and is only required to

Iron is known to play a pivotal role in tumor growth. Hyperferritinemia can result from the release of cytokines or the induction of hepcidin, which regulates iron export from the cell. In the present study, we focused on the serum concentrations of iron and ferritin in patients with androgen-independent prostate cancer, which are inversely related to survival time. Furthermore, we examined the role of metformin, a widely used antidiabetic drug, which has been linked to a reduced incidence of prostate cancer. We used the human prostate cancer cell line PC-3, which expresses hepcidin, and PC-3-Hep, a PC-3 variant whose hepcidin expression is constitutively suppressed by gene silencing. This experiment explored the effect of iron deprivation on the viability of PC-3 and PC-3-Hep cells in vitro. We found that serum concentrations of iron and ferritin were lower in patients with prostate cancer than in healthy controls. Serum levels of ferritin and iron were inversely related to survival time after prostatectomy. Our data indicate that cancer cells, like macrophages, upregulate hepcidin when iron availability decreases. Accordingly, the iron chelator desferroxamine (DFO) and metformin increased the viability of PC-3 cells. The effects of DFO and metformin were stronger than those of other agents that have been previously shown to reduce the viability of cancer cells. We have shown that the effects of DFO and metformin on the survival of PC-3 cells are mediated by the hypoxia-inducible factor-1α (HIF-1α) pathway

Its natural habitats are streams in wooded areas. Description The topography and toadlet is a species of the Australian Daintree Rainforest. It grows to in length. Its eyes, which are on the sides of the head, are positioned above the eyes of other species in this family. The female has a pair of small, rounded, bony oviducts and a pair of tubular oviducal glands. The eggs are laid in clusters at the base of leaves or other litter. The tadpole is long and slender, with an oval body and a tail that is characteristically long. It has an upper eyelid. Conservation This species is listed as vulnerable because of being restricted to small populations and a highly isolated, fragmented geographic range.
