Administration of fulgimide (3,3'-dimethyl-6-phenyl-4,4'-bipyridinium bromide) to rats produced parenteral toxicity and bronchoprotection in the bronchial test (intravenously administered histamine and prostaglandin F2alpha). Toxicity was determined by the change in the concentration of creatinine in urine. In the bronchial test, fulgimide was about 100 times more potent than pentagastrin. The bradykinin-induced cough reflex, as well as the acid-induced cough reflex, were suppressed by fulgimide. Furthermore, the guinea-pig ileum tonus was relaxed by fulgimide. These results suggest that fulgimide has a strong antitussive activity probably via central mechanisms, and it could be a promising antitussive agent.The Kraft Hockeyville 2014 contest and three day celebration will take place Nov. 25-28 in two communities in Northern Ontario – Kapuskasing and Cochrane.
