Q: Photon Transport by Diffusion We know that a photon can't go faster than the speed of light. But how do we explain that the photons travelling to the detector arrive at faster than the speed of light? A: It's not photons that travel faster than light, but a field that is analogous to a waveform - known as a field pattern (sinusoidal being the default). As it turns out, one of the uses of fields is in the engineering of information or data to transfer.
