or more of the following conditions: A. End stage renal disease. B. Chronic glomerulonephritis. C. Chronic interstitial nephritis. D. Chronic pyelonephritis. E. Renal transplantation. F. Renal tubular acidosis. G. Any other renal disease presenting with the need for renal replacement therapy which cannot be adequately treated by dialysis. It is often said that RRT is a requirement of disease. RRT is sometimes used interchangeably with dialysis, but that is not true. RRT, unlike dialysis, does not need to be chronic and involves occasional replacement of electrolytes, acids, and so on. Dialysis depends on the concentration of ions and the ability of the kidneys to take care of them. Every day your kidneys deal with the various problems of the metabolism of your body, such as balancing acids, regulating osmolality, and secreting hormones. Diabetics, for example, must have a diet low in phosphates and potassium and high in sodium and glucose. A patient of dialysis needs to consume huge quantities of water to be ultrafiltered and to have the water purged by means of dialysis. This is termed "dialytic treatment." There is another form of RRT called hemodialysis (HD). Here water is eliminated from the blood by a process that occurs in the dialyzer. The blood comes into the dialyzer, where water is released and deposited. The patient then returns to the body and the process is repeated. HD is performed three times a week for 4 hours at a time. HD is a very bad thing. It is very stressful to the patient and often life-threatening. Patients have to make frequent visits to the dialysis center and undergo this process for several hours every week. It is not fair to these patients. They need a better method. Many patients, especially the elderly, have a condition called anuria. This means that the kidney is not reabsorbing water from the urine. This condition results in high blood pressure, heart disease, and certain kinds of cancer. The disease can sometimes be corrected by a return to a more normal diet. One example of this is cereals, whose consumption can result in a decrease in blood pressure. The kidney is dependent on the blood pressure for the filtration of water from the urine. Patients with end-stage renal disease often accumulate excess uremic toxins in

Mapping the Masked Band, Dorien Wilson & Abby Fulton Although the Masked Band has often been one of the most recognizable elements of Coachella, the band has been quietly nurturing its own interests for years now. The trio's members spent a number of years building their portfolio, separately, before reuniting earlier this year. After leading the way with her debut solo album, Headspace, Dorien Wilson is now back with a new album, an EP titled Get Away. And her music—particularly her triumphant, angry stomping and sing-screaming—is truly theatrical. She's leading a band that can expand when necessary but is also putting out music for her own personal growth. At the recent KCRW-sponsored (and sold-out) event "Punk Goes Pop," I spoke with Dorien about her upcoming EP, the way she plans to use it, why she thinks her new album is such a big deal, how much of an influence her relationship with Amy Winehouse has been, and what we can expect from her in the coming months. Dorien Wilson is the singer, composer, guitarist, and one of the primary songwriters for the Masked Band (aka Wilson/Pryor/Fulton). She wrote the song "Just a Little Bit" for her debut solo album, Headspace, and they performed the song as a duo at Coachella in 2014. Pitchfork: How did the band come together in the first place? Dorien Wilson: This all kind of happened over time, my friend [Fulton] was trying to figure out the music scene in Los Angeles, how the scene is happening, and she was working with really talented bands. She actually put out a band called the Hurin Pains, and the singer of the band [Abby Fulton] is the singer in the band too. So this was a good opportunity to meet Dorien and see if we would work together. And she was like, "Yeah, we totally would work together." Abby Fulton: We met at Tiny Telephone in Athens [Ga.], and I was singing vocals on a track and she was playing guitar for the song. And then we ran into each other at the club and started talking and vibed and made some music on a CD together. Dorien: We started working with a bunch of different producers and found one
