A Beginner's Guide to Photoshop—by Yours Truly Photoshop CS 5: Getting Started The popular digital image software Photoshop is designed by industry leaders Adobe to produce high-end images for professional printing and display. Photoshop is often called the "design program," and the fact that it's been around for such a long time makes it obvious that the program was created for professional graphic designers, not as a simple photo editing program. However, Photoshop has great appeal for the casual photographer as well, and I'll show you some tricks that make it easy to create great looking images for social media and print. In addition to Photoshop's basic editing features, this book also covers: Photoshop's powerful drawing tools Importing, exporting, and transferring images from other programs Adding and manipulating layers Scanning, opening, and saving digital images Printing and finishing an image using Photoshop Getting Started with Photoshop To get started with Photoshop, you'll first need to purchase Adobe Photoshop CS 5 and some kind of network connection, such as a DSL or cable modem. You'll also need a computer with at least a 1-GHz processor and a minimum of 1GB of memory. Photoshop requires Windows Vista or Windows 7 and Mac OS X Snow Leopard or later. After all this, you're ready to learn Photoshop—and not just how to use Photoshop, but how to use Photoshop for the purpose it was designed for: creating images that are used to print and display. Introduction to Photoshop Photoshop offers a wide range of tools to help you create and edit images, including drawing and text tools, filters, and others. This book is devoted to teaching you how to use Photoshop's more advanced tools for creating crisp, professional-looking images. You'll begin to see the manual tasks you can perform when you use Photoshop by mastering the basic tools and learning how to use the advanced tools. With all this in mind, you can begin creating your images by installing Photoshop. To learn more about installing the software, see my book Photoshop CS 5 All-In-One For Dummies. Handling Your Images After you install Photoshop, you'll need to open and import image files. Then you'll need to use a basic workflow to develop an editing style or concept for the image you've created. The first image you create in Photoshop will most likely be of the highest

Q: CURL Request Headers missing on second request I am running a simulation on a personal project on AWS under Ubuntu 16.04. I am using CURLOPT_HEADER to set a custom header before my request. I made a single request to simulate a payload, but when I send a second request I get this error: cURL request failed: Cannot connect to remote server I am not receiving any errors with the simulation itself. I am able to simulate a request and receive the response just fine on the first request. I am trying to send a second request to simulate another payload. Here is my code: $header = "Authorization: Bearer $code "; $header.= "X-Foo: bar "; $header.= "Content-Type: application/json "; // Send request on first simulation only // Get response $ch = curl_init(); curl_setopt($ch, CURLOPT_URL, ''); curl_setopt($ch, CURLOPT_HEADER, true); curl_setopt($ch, CURLOPT_RETURNTRANSFER, 1); $response = curl_exec($ch); curl_close($ch); $header.= "Authorization: Bearer $code "; $header.= "X-Foo: bar "; $header.= "Content-Type: application/json "; // Send request on second simulation // Get response $ch = curl_init(); curl_setopt($ch, CURLOPT_URL, ''); curl_setopt($ch, CURLOPT_RETURNTRANSFER, 1); curl_setopt($ch, CURLOPT_HEADER, $header); curl_setopt($ch, CURLOPT_HTTPHEADER, $header); $response = curl_exec($ch); curl_close($ch); I tried adding the $header to the options array and setting it as a value instead of a string, but I still receive the same error. I have verified that the header is sent and is in the right place, but it is just not being sent along with the request

Harry Ben-Atar, a sixth generation leather tanner in Israel who founded Aviv, a leading leather goods company, and became the first Israeli to hold an MBE, has died aged 92. After marrying his first cousin, Magda Ben-Atar, who ran her own business selling Russian goods, he was unable to secure funding to start a tannery. Instead, he decided to make and sell shoes, his long-held passion. In 1960, he took a huge gamble, adopting his wife's small family business, which made them rich. They started producing men's shoes for Zim, which went on to become one of the best-known shoe brands in the world. The management control model he set up, based on fierce meritocracy, was revolutionary. "After a couple of years, we changed to a staff management model, where the employees are all owners. Suddenly it felt like we were part of a family," he recalled. Harry Ben-Atar: 'My father was a brilliant artist' Read more He bought a further 60-100 manufacturing units, and then floated Aviv on the stock exchange in 1973, selling 2.5m shares and raising $4m. In 1979, Aviv bought an 80% stake in the largest leather manufacturer in Britain, and Harry Ben-Atar became the first Israeli to hold an MBE. He also established a cadastre for leather in Israel, which has evolved into the country's leading leathertech company. Sign up for the Sleeve newsletter Read more He said when he took over the stock exchange he was the first Israeli to "see the shares go through the roof. I grew up with a feeling of privilege, knowing the biggest company in Israel was my company." His passion lay in producing high-quality leather products. He had a particular interest in shoes, he said, as he had grown up as the oldest of eight children, and "during that period, there was no money for shoes". Aviv was transformed into a conglomerate with a number of subsidiaries. "The last time I visited Israel in the mid-1990s, the family did not exist," he recalled. "But I went back, and realised that the family was still there." Harry Ben-Atar became a consultant to nine of his companies. His seven grandchildren all started their own companies
