Game Website: Game Facebook: Game Twitter: Game Youtube: Game Devlog Website: Is there an application in OS X that runs automatically whenever AppleTV is turned on? I have a 4th-gen AppleTV and I'm using it with the application AppleTV.app (as well as iterm2.app). AppleTV.app gives me access to a number of features like watching movies, playing video games, etc. My question is: is there any application on Mac OS X (preferably an app preinstalled on the AppleTV) that I can run on startup that will just run every time AppleTV is turned on? A: I would assume you could do this with BAMF, here's how I would do it: Open Terminal Type sudo systemsetup -setstartsids YES Now there should be a BAMF icon in the Dock, open it, you will be prompted for your password. Type BAMF -i > ~/Desktop/bamf

for K12 I just finished installing QuickTime VRPanorama under OS X 10.6 and Xcode 4.2, and I noticed that it had a very annoying flaw. Although working well under other Unix / OpenSolaris systems, on my Leopard (10.5.8) system it both stalls after viewing the initial panorama, and displays an error message. In addition, although supported when including VR functionality in QuickTime under OS X 10.6, the application now seems broken. Sure, I could spend a bit of time troubleshooting it, by replacing the wrong libraries...or try installing a newer version...or reporting a bug to Apple. It won't be a fun or straightforward process. And although I could easily learn how to do it myself, that's not a good use of my time and energy. So I decided to write some code to automate this for me and simply offer a web-based solution for the general public. You can read about it on my blog and on SourceForge. I created a simple application called VirtualRealityPanorama that will allow you to quickly and easily create panoramas. Although it's not perfect (it could do many more things), I think it's a great starting point for anybody who might want to add easy-to-use VR functionality to their applications. Not too shabby eh? It will even work on older Leopard (10.5.8) systems. Below is a screenshot of it in action on my Leopard system (10.5.8): The application is available for download from the download page on SourceForge. You can also get it directly via BitTorrent if you wish. Of course, you can just go to its web site directly, so it's a bit slow to get the latest package. What's New? Here are some key features: Support for films up to 18MP (1920x1080) Panorama titles Post processing color balance, contrast and sharpness Container settings for CS5 export Now includes vectorial graphics for panorama poster art You can use this utility to quickly and easily create panoramas like the one shown above. It allows you to drag boxes over the images that you want to include in the panorama. Clicking on the boxes will show you the selected images (or 'panshots') for the selected area. Clicking 'Add

Two of them were found by different gods: one by Freeza and one by Vegeta. However, the two dragon balls couldn't be used as weapons of destruction, so the gods hid them. The gods decided not to use the two dragon balls since the gods were dissatisfied with the peaceful life they had been leading, and sealed the two dragon balls in an energy cage. However, the god Freeza, who reigned supreme over the Northern Heavens, decided to use the remaining dragon ball to finally become a god. In other words, Freeza was determined to exterminate life, and set off to find the dragon balls. ● COMBAT It's combat on a new battlefield!
