Q: How to refactor a recursive loop of contents? I have a method with the following structure. I want to avoid refactoring the loop because the changes are too wide-scoped (due to a strong requirement). I don't think the solution to get a tree structure is an option.

public void SomeMethod(object obj) { bool usePlugin = true;
foreach (var item in GetList()) { if (usePlugin) { // Do something } foreach (var subItem in item) { if (usePlugin) { // Do something } }
foreach (var subItem in item) { if (usePlugin) { // Do something } } }

Is there a simple way of refactoring this? EDIT: I'm not sure if this helps but I want to avoid refactoring because I'm in development for an internal product which is a pain to bug-track and have to submit release builds to customers.

A: So if you can't change the structure, you'll have to do something like this:

public void SomeMethod(object obj) { bool usePlugin = true; List results = new List();
results.AddRange(GetList()); foreach (var item in results) { if (usePlugin
