Autodesk.au. Finally, we found no association between viral load and mortality (and disease severity measured by the APACHE II or MOD scores), suggesting that SARS-CoV-2 could be actively replicating in the patient. Taken together, the data suggest that during the earliest days of a SARS-CoV-2 infection, pulmonary parenchyma is the main site of infection, with most of the patient morbidity occurring due to lymphocytic infiltration and cytokine release syndrome and only a minority of disease due to tissue damage.

! [COVID-19 lung histopathology. (A) Chest computed tomography scan from a patient with COVID-19 showing bilateral subpleural ground glass opacities with no lower lobe predominant disease. (B) Lung from a patient with COVID-19 showing diffuse alveolar damage. The section is from a patient with 5 days of COVID-19

onset and 3 days of hospitalization at the time of biopsy. (C) Subpleural infarcts with pulmonary edema are present in patients with COVID-19, many of which (indicated by the arrow) have cavitation. (D) Examination of lung parenchyma from
