The Deskclock is a nice clock widget for my desktop that has been written in java and requires the JDK1.5. It is a very simple clock that currently only has the following features: One-line display, current time, normal time format with am/pm, months with number (1-12), years with numbers (50-2000), months with words (Feb, Apr, Jun, Aug...), seconds, stopwatch, log file, and indication that the clock widget is running in the taskbar. There are some methods to control the Deskclock: 1. Setting the timezone: You can change the zone the Deskclock will use to know the local time in. To do this, right-click the Deskclock from the taskbar and click the 'Change the time zone' option. You can add as many time zones as you want. By default, the time zone will be the current local time. 2. Checking the time format: Right-click the Deskclock from the taskbar and select 'Check formatting'. You can select from AM/PM, 24-hour, AM/PM on a single line, and more. In addition, you can choose a color for the hour and for the minute and/or seconds. 3. Turning the stopwatch on: Right-click the Deskclock from the taskbar and select 'Stop watch on/off' option to see the stopwatch. When you click on it, the clock will turn red, and when you click it again, it will turn off. 4. Running the log file: Right-click the Deskclock from the taskbar and select 'Log file on/off'. When you click on it, it will start writing the current time in the log file. 5. Selecting colors for the clock: Right-click the Deskclock from the taskbar and select 'Color on/off' option to change the color of the clock and the seconds. You can choose from: black, white, red, blue, green, yellow, cyan, magenta, and gray. the Desktop is a Windows utility used to add tasks to your desktop (on the Windows Taskbar). You can also select from pre-made backgrounds, pictures, or easily create your own (including animated ones). The Desktop is a much more detailed taskbar replacement (notifications, stuff, etc) than any other taskbar replacement I've used (DualView, Maximus b7e8fdf5c8
