In Detail Serious Sam: The First Encounter lives up to its name. This first instalment in a series of five games, starring an ancient prophet, a monk and a peasant from Sam One-day-old, might just be the first real video game to earn itself the tag of an action/shooter. This unlikely hero must save the world from an omniscient human killing machine. The bounty on his head is high, and this adversary promises to be beyond his best efforts. Prepare to explore the Siberian wastes and desolate steppes, pig farms and haystacks, and pawnshops and churches as the hero recovers his sanity and exorcises the evil with the aid of Sam's faithful crow. But who exactly is Sam? What is his problem? And who are you? Enter the world of Serious Sam and restore tranquility to the land in the serious, but not uncommon, journey Serious Sam: The First Encounter Soundtrack. Serious Sam: The First Encounter is an intense, action-packed shooter with great music. This soundtrack fits the mood perfectly, building tension before every one of the lighthearted animations and stimulating the action from its opening beat. Inside this incredible 13.5-hour-long album there are more than 100 remixes and original compositions by JF, Glen B, MiseryFM, Cadeon, Elefant and Skitane. There are techno compositions, orchestral compositions, indie-rock and ambient music and even a eurodisco recreation of the Operation Condor theme! Enzymatic de-icing of the surfaces of sea ice has been applied for some time. The ice can be treated either by applying a liquid enzyme solution directly to the ice, or by application of a substrate coated on a substrate having a pro-pitiful enzyme on it. The efficient de-icing of hard ice, however, requires a substrate containing a bio-compatible adhesive component which withstands repeated freezing and thawing cycles, can withstand the presence of surface pore water, and is not subject to intense freeze-thaw cycle degradation. The application of de-icing of the surfaces of sea ice has long been known to be a key to safe operation of vessels in the winter environment. Over time, chemical and biological approaches have been demonstrated and applied to the problem of overcoming the problems associated with sea ice during winter navigation. Both chemical and biological methods are capable of modifying the surface texture of the ice. Additionally, chemical methods can reduce the thickness of the ice layer through the introduction of open channels which increase the heat transfer rate and thus increase the de-icing rate. Biological methods instead cause the growth of crystals on the surface of the ice, followed by the formation of clear channels through the resulting larger crystals. When used as a treatment for chemical hardening, biological agents allow better control of the de-icing process. Industrial problems have limited the use of conventional all-chemical de-icers. Known de-icers such as Go-Buster® (presumably Go-Devil® in the US), contain similar issues such as all-volatile organic compounds and problems with stability of the chemical system. Go-Buster® (presumably Go-Devil® in the US) is a product of Hornsby Inc, London, Ontario. Go-Buster® (presumably Go-Devil® in the US) has been found to have some degradation of the adhesive and therefore is not suitable for applications which require good adhesion of substrate to ice. Go-Buster® (presumably Go-Devil® in the US) also has issues with product stability. The use of conventional treated sea ice has shown lower thermal conductivity, less clear crystal ice, and
