Account Hacker V3.9.9 Activation Key: Decrypted and downloadable hash from our database that contains more than 240 billion words. Prevalence of hypertension: a comparison of self-reported data from a household survey and blood pressure measurements in the UAE. We compared the results of a multistage stratified random sample household survey on the prevalence of hypertension (HTN) in the UAE with the results of blood pressure measurements in people who were screened during community-based events. One hundred and eighty-four households were selected by quota sampling from randomly selected census clusters. Participants were screened for HTN at home using an electrocardiogram and a single blood pressure measurement. Five hundred and nine participants aged 25-64 years (48% men) participated in the survey and 267 in the blood pressure screening events. The survey yielded a 42.9% rate of HTN in comparison with a 37.7% rate among the participants from the screening events. The age-adjusted prevalence of HTN, defined as blood pressure  $\geq 160/90$  mm Hg or self-reported medication for high blood pressure, increased significantly from 40.3% in the younger to 57.7% in the older age groups. The frequency of HTN increased significantly with age (P{ "id": "243920", "name": "Epics", "full\_name": "epics/epics", "owner": { "login": "epics", "id": "7961", "avatar\_url": "", "0cc13bf012
