Living Green in Summertime Posted by smccann@hometownlife.com on April 18, 2014 It's that time of year again when we take a look at something we love: green living. I don't know about you, but in the summer, I get a little excited about the amount of fresh food that is available. This year is a little different, as I have gotten a little older, I have spent more time on the computer this year, and I have gotten a little more serious about trying to clean up my act. I love all the fruits and veggies that are in season, but as I have been thinking about this summer months, I have been thinking of what I can do to keep our house a little cleaner, and our food fresh, during this summer. Here are a few ways to make sure you stay green this summer: Wash Your Produce: Using a produce brush, scrub the inside of your produce. Why not buy produce that is pre-washed. I find that it is much easier to wash fruits and veggies before I eat them. Pre-Wash Your Produce: There are some produce that you should eat without washing, such as tomatoes, cucumbers and peppers. Peels, seeds and blemishes on a fruit or vegetable can contain harmful bacteria. However, if you have a certain type of fruit that you want to eat raw (such as an apple or a banana), it can be a good idea to wash it. Water Your Garden: Water your garden when plants are growing, but do not water when they are fully grown. This will keep your soil from getting too wet. Use Gray Water: Watering plants with grey water (water that is recycled or reused) can be an alternative to using water that comes from a municipal tap. Top Tip: When you are a gardening enthusiast, you may want to consider installing a rain barrel. It is easy to use and it can help you save money on using your natural resources. If you have a lot of plants in your yard or a backyard garden, you may want to consider having a rain barrel on your property to help water your plants. Pre-Pour Your Water: You may want to
