A: They're pattern-matching. The first matches the first object in the list, the second object in the list, and so on, until the end of the list. What (car list) does is call the car function on that object, and (cdr list) call the cdr function. Here are some notes on pattern-matching in scheme: An object does not have to be a list for you to use pattern-matching on it. For example, the eof object matches any object that happens to look like an end-of-file. a list of two numbers, ((1 2)) can be pattern-matched with the pattern (listof (1 2)). It is also possible to use the, macro to write patterns like this: (let ((1 2 3) (foo (fn bar...))) (let ((list-of-objects foo)) ; Rest of program)) list-of-objects (here list-of-objects) is a synonym for (car list). To use it to refer to the entire list, use 'list-of-objects instead.
