determining the (2S,4S) content of cis-4-methyl-2-hexenoic acid. Specifically, methods for determining the content of the (2S,4S)-cis isomer of trans-4-methyl-2-hexenoic acid are disclosed.

Additionally, methods for preparing (2S,4S)-cis-4-methyl-2-hexenoic acid are disclosed.

Cis-4-methyl-2-hexenoic acid is a valuable compound having numerous uses. For example, cis-4-methyl-2-hexenoic acid is useful as an intermediate in the preparation of optically active herbicides such as those disclosed in U.S. Pat. Nos. 5,736,183 and 6,043,077. Additionally, cis-4-methyl-2-hexenoic acid, also known as acutumol, has found widespread use as a perfume component in perfumes and flavor oils. Unfortunately, a significant amount of the commercial cis-4-methyl-2-hexenoic acid produced today is the (2S,4S)-cis isomer rather than the more desirable (2R,4S)-cis isomer. This cis isomer is formed by the optical resolution of the racemic trans isomer of cis-4-methyl-2-hexenoic acid. The biological and chemical half-life of the (2R,4S)-cis isomer of cis-4-methyl-2-hexenoic acid is significantly shorter than that of the (2S,4S)-cis isomer. Therefore, the processes currently used for producing the desired (2S,4S)-cis isomer are not economically practical
