SerialÂ . .Seven years later, the city of Chicago -- and more than 27,000 south suburban residents -- won a battle with a massive ethanol plant to be built in the neighborhood, the Tribune has learned. The Illinois Environmental Protection Agency issued a unanimous draft environmental impact report for the Prairie Rivers Scenic and Recreational Corridor, or PRR, in south suburban Carol Stream last week, the first of two reports that must be completed for the $3 billion project. The final report is scheduled to be completed this fall and the project is expected to be built by 2020. The project spans 9,100 acres and would generate 2,000 jobs and produce enough ethanol to power more than 63,000 vehicles each year. The make-it-legal quibble began in 2009 when Chicago sued to prevent the project. Chicago officials argued that the air district that the project would fall under had not considered all the potential traffic and air-quality impacts from roughly 1.5 million gallons of ethanol that would be produced every day. Chicago also argued the air district didn't consider the huge number of trucks that would travel to and from the facility. But the air district disagreed with Chicago and in May 2011, it decided to approve the project. The state's Appellate Court this year reversed that decision and the Illinois Supreme Court agreed in July. The ruling required the Illinois EPA to craft the environmental impact report for the
