Q: How do I run a script against a mysql database in 10.10? I'm trying to automate some of the import/export tasks. I want to run a script against a mysql database which would have "text" files that I will have to convert into other formats. A: Open up MySQL client. Select MySQL at the top of the dialogue. Select your database. Open the "explorer" tab. The table explorer will show you the tables you have. Select the table you wish to import data into, and then select "actions" Select "SQL", and then give your import query. If you want to import to a named table (in order to be able to store what type of data it is) you need to specify the TABLE_NAME. A: You can do it with the external command (>) rather than from within MySQL. See this answer about how to access this. Just open the terminal, enter the following command, and hit enter: `mysql -e "CALL EXTERNAL'myfile.pl'"` From the above answer: Give command: `mysql -e " bff6bb2d33`
