Rating: Q: What is the best way to start a logfile of all ran application in a machine? I need to make a log file of all the running applications. I have taken the effort and I figured out it can be done by following way: Open Task Manager and find the app IDs which are in the running task(s). Open Registry Editor and look for all the persisted app data (values with the key name "sApplicationName" and values stored in HKEY_LOCAL_MACHINE\SOFTWARE\Microsoft\Windows NT\CurrentVersion\AppCompatFlags\Layers") Extract the data. My question is: I need a general solution which can be applied on any OS. A: When you start a new process, it's given the current PID of the process so you can always determine if it's still running or not. When the process is killed, the PID will be changed. That makes it trivial to always know if the process is running or not. That's assuming you don't kill the process as well (which is not required by the language). You will have to know what to look for in the Registry but it's usually not that hard. You can get the PID from the task manager or you can open a CMD window and run "for /f " %i in ('tasklist /FI "PID eq %PID%"') DO echo %i" } if (!AES_set_decrypt_key(session, dec_key, 128)) { if (strcmp("", result)) { goto error; } } k0 ^= t; k1 ^= t; k2 ^= t; k3 ^= t; k4 ^= t; k5 ^= t; k6 ^= t;
