Advertisements About Us We are a group of friends that are on a journey to provide various resources for our community. We are constantly looking for ways that we can improve the community and one of our objectives is to create a "hub" for all things we find. Microfluidic continuous-flow column: an efficient and robust high-throughput method for the study of growth factor inhibition by small molecules. We report the application of a microfluidic continuous-flow (CF) column as a novel tool to efficiently study the effect of small molecules on growth factor signaling pathways. The technology provides a continuous-flow microfluidic platform that integrates a deformable microfluidic device with an optical sensor for continuous monitoring of cell growth. This technology was used to probe the inhibition by colchicine of the TGF-beta and IGF-I signaling pathways in a time-dependent manner. The resulting outputs offer an effective tool to screen small molecules based on their ability to inhibit growth factor signaling and affect cell growth and survival.
