Field of the Invention The present invention relates generally to a linear induction motor, and more particularly to a coreless linear induction motor having a laminated coreless coil that does not need a core. 2. Description of the Related Art Generally, a linear induction motor is used as a direct drive motor for printing apparatuses such as printing presses. This linear induction motor includes a rotor, a mover and a stator. The mover is formed of a permanent magnet that rotates along a cylindrical surface of the rotor. The stator is formed of an iron core and a coreless coil wound around the iron core. The coreless coil of the stator is rotated along the surface of the iron core by a magnetic force produced between the coreless coil and the rotor. Such a linear induction motor is disclosed in U.S. Pat. No. 6.057.416. The coreless coil of the stator of the linear induction motor described in the U.S. Pat. No. 6,057,416 is formed of a plurality of wires. The plurality of wires are tightly wound about each other. The tight winding causes each wire to have a smaller diameter than that of a single wire
