A: You are being forwarded to the.com link, so it's likely this is a part of a single larger virus / worm attack that you didn't notice.

I've been receiving all sorts of strange emails like this and they are usually all the same. That's just the type of stuff I get, but they can have varying size attachments. If you received this, there's only one thing that can possibly send it to you (and not have it be a false positive): Someone sent you a link to a dangerous file, but it was a link to a legit site. The link has been changed, like it's in a mass email attack.

See if you can get any kind of confirmation from someone using an outbound email address. You can check this by sending them an email from your legit address. If this type of attack does sound familiar to you, check out these websites. SpamCop give you a rule for how you can protect yourself, but these should help get you started. Stay on Top of Emerging Technology Trends Get updates impacting your industry from our GigaOm Research Community Photo by Brian Stauffer My friend and colleague Ian Bogost had a long post today about how he's leaving academia for something more interesting — like science fiction. That got me thinking: what do I want to do more of besides work? There are two main answers to this question: teaching and writing. (I'm sorry, but these are the only two things I am good at.) In my teaching career thus far (which is, admittedly, a short one), I have had my darlings and my duds. The classes that I'm most excited to teach are the ones that are, to my mind, the best classes I've ever taught. Also, the duds: the seminar on soft gravitation I designed with Brian Kemp a few years ago that we had to cancel when the organizers couldn't pay for it, and the one on the “academic subcultures” where I had to write a “brilliant” essay on “how to write like me.” Even when I’m excited about a class, a significant part of the joy is the challenge of planning the schedule, composing the syll
