Yes! Band-in-a-Box will tell you which styles are compatible with your song. For example, if you write an electric guitar song using a blues style, the song will be compatible with all style names that start with blues and are available on your system, such as Blues, Rock, Reggae, etc. You can check the styles you have installed by going to Edit -> Preferences -> Styles in your main Band-in-a-Box screen. Please note that the first style that appears under "Available Styles" is the style name you used when creating your song, not the name you installed. For example, if you create an electric guitar song using the Style name "Electric Guitar", it will be called "Electric Guitar (Electric Guitar)" in the "Available Styles" list. The first style that appears in the list is the name that you gave the song, not the style name that was used when you created the song. You can change the Instrument sound in your song by using the instrument panel on the top of your main Band-in-a-Box screen. Look at the "Instruments" tabs - there are a few different sounds available, such as guitar, ukulele, snare, bass, piano, triangle, record player, and many more. You can preview what these sounds look like in your song by holding down the Control key and clicking on each of the instrument names. The precise appearance of the sound file will depend on your computer. Yes! You can add guitar effects to your song such as EQ, reverb, delay, chorus, flange, vibrato, etc. Just click on the "Effect" tab, then add your desired effect by clicking the "+" symbol, then drag the slider to the appropriate amount. You can preview your song with any of the effect applied by holding down Control and clicking on the "Preview" button. You can also learn more about the difference between the effects that are included in Band-in-a-Box by downloading the free online how-to and viewing it from the Downloads -> How to's -> Effects menu item. If you want a specific effect, you can always make your own by saving an instrument from your song, then dragging it to a new location in the "Effect" panel.
