The keyword searches are built into the application. (Yuck.) You can try /getplaces and /getplacesbytown but most of the time you need to specify a latitude and longitude or zip code. Peak gusting can occur up to 25 to 30 mph (40 to 50 km/h), but not more than 40 to 50 mph (60 to 80 km/h) The buildings where everyone "breathes" the air are the most vulnerable to wind damage. They have a lot more people and equipment. The good news is that smaller structures including homes and commercial buildings can be designed to be less vulnerable to these winds. According to the National Institute of Building Sciences (NIBS) in 2011, three criteria must be met to design a building for enhanced survival in a worst case scenario. The three criteria are energy transfer, energy collection and air zone building interior to the atmosphere. The transfer occurs through the use of insulation, windows, doors, heat pumps, etc. A building also needs to be designed to be designed to supply air for the building envelope. Finally, building envelope. Finally, building technology must also be designed for building longevity. Buildings require servicing in order to remain viable. When you design your building to be resistant to the forces of nature, it will help you have a successful operation.
