two times a day, the list of words/phrases to translate is generated, based on the last translated source texts. generally, these sources are not large, so you will not miss any translated phrase or word. it automatically generates an html page with search and export features. it can be useful if you have prepared a bibliography, as you can quickly generate a list of words/phrases to translate when you next visit your translation memory. google translate supports a variety of languages, but unfortunately it is only available on the google chrome browser. if you are developing an application that you need to translate, you can take advantage of its api and make use of its translation features. the sdk is available in java and python, and sdks for other languages are also available. i have been using google translate for a while now, but i am never quite satisfied with the translation engine. this tool allows you to control every detail of the translation process, from the source text to the target language. you can go through the translation process by selecting a source or target language, and you can also choose to translate a specific word or phrase by typing it in the search field. the tool allows you to edit the translated source text and the translated target text, as well as the source text/target text pair. the source text and the target language are not mutually exclusive, so you can use the tools of your choice to edit the target text and its translation. if you're using the google cloud translation api, you can use the preprocessor api without having to worry about the api limits and using free credits. note that to do this, you'll need to send an email to your customers with instructions on how to access this api.
